

Holly Hill 's Original Town Hall

Before the current Holly Hill City Hall was built, the city's business was transacted in a modest two-story wood-frame house on Daytona Avenue where Sica Hall Community Center now stands. It had a holding cell and city offices on the first floor. A sign on the porch said, "Ring the bell for fire, police." The jail is shown on the right. Schoolchildren from the nearby school would stop by to look at any prisoners through the window.

If you notice in the photo of Lucy and Bob the porch had coquina pillars. This porch was lost in a storm and the simple overhang replaced it.

Julius E. Sizemore and his wife Lucy looked after things and lived on the house's second floor. He was the one who'd often answered the bell if somebody rang after hours and Lucy would cook for the prisoners should anyone remain in custody by dinner time. It was, needless to say, an informal operation.

For its last hoorah the building was used by the Boy's and Girls Club until they moved out of the structure from the school. The building is now the school cafeteria.
